

OFF-SITE TRANSITIONAL DUTY PROGRAM

Meaningful and productive return-to-work opportunities for your employee, hassle-free.

An injured employee's return to work can boost morale and help your business return to normal. But in some cases, it can be challenging to modify an employee's role to accommodate their recovery needs.

That's why EMPLOYERS® teams up with Genex to offer an Off-Site Transitional Duty Program, providing short-term work assignments at local nonprofit organizations for employees with temporary medical restrictions*.

These work assignments can help your recovering employees feel productive and valued while earning a regular wage and benefits and also helping the community. Plus, getting your employee back to work can speed up their recovery and return to full duty.

What You Can Do

A little collaboration between you, your injured employee, and your claims adjuster can make a big impact. Here's how it works:

- When an employee is cleared for restricted work, let your claims adjuster know.
- Your claims adjuster will help determine if modified duty at your worksite is possible.
- If accommodations aren't possible, we arrange off-site work at a local nonprofit.

The nonprofit will assign your employee tasks within the parameters outlined by their treating physician and supervise their work.
