Dr. James Dobson: Well, hello everyone. I'm James Dobson and you're listening to Family Talk, a listener supported ministry. In fact, thank you so much for being part of that support for James Dobson Family Institute.

Roger Marsh: As a mom or dad, do you ever wonder if you're actually making a difference in the world? Your days are filled with tending to a little one or maybe you have a couple of kids or you're growing a brood? Well, cooking, cleaning, the never-ending laundry, shuttling littles here and there. Cooking some more, cleaning up after that, running errands, working and more. Well, if that sounds like a normal day in your life, I think that today's interview will bring you some encouragement. I'm Roger Marsh, and today on Family Talk, we are sharing part two of a testimonial that just might put your life in perspective. We are continuing Dr. Dobson's classic conversation with Randy and Marcia Hekman. We have titled this two day broadcast, "The Joys of Raising a Large Family." Dr. Dobson selected this interview to present to you today because he sees the value in the biblical principles that were discussed, even though this program was recorded many years ago. Now, if you missed part one of his conversation with the Hekmans, visit our broadcast page at drjamesdobson.org.

Before we jump back into the middle of this discussion, let me tell you about today's guests. Randy Hekman is the executive director of The Grand Awakening, a ministry that exists to inspire yearning and prayer for revival in the church in West Michigan. He's also a licensed attorney, former prosecuting attorney, former juvenile court judge, and founding executive director of the Michigan Family Forum. He's also a former pastor and has authored three books, including Truth that Sets America Free, and Sweeter by the Dozen. Marcia Hekman is the chief assistant of The Grand Awakening. She's a prayer warrior, development director and best friend to her husband, Randy. Randy and Marcia Hekman reside in Michigan with their family. They have 12 children and 35 grandchildren.

Now, not long before this interview was recorded, Randy decided to retire from his judgeship in Michigan to found the Michigan Family Forum. Randy and Marcia will talk about the prayer and waiting on the Lord that brought them to that decision on today's program. So let's listen in right here on Family Talk.

Dr. James Dobson:

I have an article in front of me. It's short. I don't often read things here on the broadcast, but this really did move me, and I want to read it to you and then get you all to react to it. This was written by John Lofton, who's a friend of mine, a reporter in the Washington DC area, and it was published in All News, February 12th, 1990. And the title of it is, "Yes, Abortion is a Personal Issue." And I didn't know this about John. This is what he wrote.

"As I watched the pro-life marchers come to Washington DC this year, I thought again, as I do every time they come of my youngest son, Andrew, who is 19. And I thought about how I was almost, but for God's grace, a party to his murder in the womb.

I remember well when I first learned that my wife Barbara was pregnant with Andrew. It was early in 1970. I had two children, Grace, my oldest and John III, and my wife and I had just sat down to eat dinner after she had gone to the doctor because she wasn't feeling well. When I asked Barbara what the doctor had said was wrong with her, she didn't answer me right away. I asked the question again. "Well," she replied, somewhat sheepishly, "he said I have a very common illness," and she smiled. "I am pregnant. About two months pregnant and everything's fine."

But for me, everything wasn't fine. No way. The last thing in the world I wanted was another child. We didn't have enough money to have a third child, and well, well I just didn't want to have another kid period. I felt angry. I felt trapped. So being the know-it-all young conservative I was, but not a Christian, I had a quick solution. Abortion. Nonchalantly, and between bites of food, I said firmly, "You're going to have an abortion," but I had seriously misjudged my wife's willingness to do whatever I said. Just as firmly, in fact more so, Barbara said to me, "I am not going to have an abortion. I will divorce you and leave you before I will have an abortion."

Shortly thereafter at my wife's request, I met with her doctor, a good man who had delivered our other two children. He too opposed the abortion idea, pointing out that the unborn child in my wife's womb was developing fine and was healthy. Thus, he wondered, why would I want an abortion? I had no good answers. I mindlessly repeated the arguments, which I had heard somewhere. What my wife was pregnant with wasn't really human yet. It was just a blob of cells, a bunch of tissue, etc. But my heart wasn't in any of those statements.

To make a long story short, my wife gave birth to Andrew and not long after this, I don't remember how or where, I came into possession of some pro-life literature and pictures, which showed conclusively that my unborn third child was indeed a living human being. Needless to say, I was to put it mildly, greatly relieved by what I had not done. I was and remain extremely thankful to God that Andrew was not aborted. I'm glad my wife refused to compromise on this issue.

So, when I write about abortion, it is not an abstract issue. For me too, it is, as they say, a personal issue, a very personal issue. And the person involved is Andrew Buckley-Lofton, who has grown up to be a fine young man. But even if he wasn't, he didn't deserve to be murdered in his mother's womb." Isn't that powerful?

Randy Hekman: It's very powerful.

Dr. James Dobson: I have never known anybody, maybe they couldn't be honest about it, but I have never known anyone who considered abortion and then didn't have one allowing the child to be born and knowing that child, who has said, I made the wrong choice. When you can hold that individual and you know who they are and you begin to bond with them and you realize how wrong it is, that's the perspective from which this act becomes so terrible.

Marcia Hekman: That's right.

Dr. James Dobson: When you see what you were really doing.

Marcia Hekman: Because I could have been pregnant and made the same decision. It's like I was at the same deciding point almost.

Randy Hekman: See, we make the mistake of thinking that if we lose a million children in America, because people have other priorities and they either abort them or just decide not to have them. Well, we can replace that million children from America with a million kids from India or some other country.

But when God makes a child, has a child in his mind He wants to create, He throws away the mold. Each child is of infinite value and is a unique creation of God.

Dr. James Dobson: We are totally different.

Randy Hekman: Totally different. And it's going to be so exciting to see what God has planned for their lives. They are going help the future of this country without question in their own way.

Marcia Hekman: And I think it makes a difference how I treat them if I think, yeah, I made you kids. Your attitude gets so angry when they're bad. It's like, I thought I could have prevented this child.

Randy Hekman: A strong-willed one.

Marcia Hekman: A strong-willed one. Instead of this is God's creation here. It's not mine. Gives me a better respect for them. We get to keep praying as we got criticized for this thinking.

Randy Hekman: Look, can I tie into this thing as it ties into child abuse and neglect? If we believe that we are responsible for making our children physically, what I make, I own. What I own and am displeased with, I can break or misuse.

Child abuse, which takes so of my time as a juvenile court judge, including sexual abuse, knows if I have unmet needs or if I am frustrated with my child, I could have prevented you. It seems to me that the mentality that says that I own my child, at least in part feeds this mentality of child abuse.

Dr. James Dobson: It's an entire degradation of the value of a life, isn't it?

Randy Hekman: That's exactly right.

Dr. James Dobson: Let's talk a little bit about your experience as a juvenile court judge. You have been a judge for 15 years.

Randy Hekman: Correct.

Dr. James Dobson: You've seen a lot of kids coming through.

Randy Hekman: Oh, thousands.

Dr. James Dobson: You love those youngsters too?

Randy Hekman: I do.

Dr. James Dobson: Who are in rebellion and many of them have...

Randy Hekman: Awesome.

Dr. James Dobson: ... Been convicted of drug abuse and breaking and entering and everything.

Randy Hekman: So many of these kids of course come from just deplorable situations. That doesn't excuse their conduct, but I do. God has given me a love for those kids and for their parents. We have child abuse and neglect cases and adoption cases as well.

Dr. James Dobson: Now you're leaving the bench to take over the coalition in Michigan. What's the name of it?

Randy Hekman: It's called the Michigan Family Forum.

Dr. James Dobson: The purpose of it is to deal with these pro-family issues and the morality and some of the things we're talking about today.

Randy Hekman: That's correct.

Dr. James Dobson: Marcia, Randall probably won't say it about himself. I'd like you to say. What the kids who have come before him feel for him now that he's leaving the bench.

Marcia Hekman: Well, we were driving along. We were having one of our Friday night dates or something. We'd try to keep in touch here and still have fun together and everything. And he was saying, you know who's the saddest about me leaving my judgeship? I was trying to think. I don't remember what I guessed. But he said, these teenage girls. One of these girls, and there's lots of them that my court caseworkers are saying are calling collect to their case workers and saying he can't leave because...

Well, the particular one he was talking about to me had kicked the caseworker and spit on her. And she was in tears on the phone to the caseworker saying he can't leave because he and you, my caseworker, are the only ones that understand me. After he has...

Dr. James Dobson: How does that make you feel?

Randy Hekman: I was so amazed to hear that, because I see these kids in my court and I'm fairly firm with them, but to help them, you've got to have a degree of firmness. It just blew me away to think that these kids who were so upset, at least on the outside in my court, would want me to be, just to remain a part of their lives.

But as you think through it, and the caseworker said, you know, I think it's because they never had a father and never had a father that loved them enough to set limits for them and be there for them, and I was as much as they've ever had.

Dr. James Dobson: It was a major decision for you to leave the bench, wasn't it?

Randy Hekman: It definitely was. I was looking for any reason to say no to leaving, because again, I've had great opportunities in the job, both locally, statewide and even nationwide to have an influence. And so to leave, I had to really be convinced that I could be more effective in being part of this coalition as compared to what I was able to do as a judge.

Dr. James Dobson: Explain now the coalition idea, Randy, because there's 16 of these currently developed in 16 states and we hope to have coalitions in all 50 states before very long. Explain what they're designed to do.

Randy Hekman: Well, the coalitions have a number of factors, but basically we're talking about an education and research organization at its heart, and it's designed to work with all the organizations in the State of Michigan, ours is, that are trying to push and strengthen the family.

Dr. James Dobson: You did a very courageous thing. You had, I believe a 16 year old girl, come before your court.

Randy Hekman: 13 year old.

Dr. James Dobson: 13, who was a ward of the court, which means you make the decisions, some important decisions about her life and she was pregnant and she was petitioning to have an abortion because she didn't want to carry the baby. And you turned her down, you took a lot of heat for that.

Randy Hekman: I really did. She was four to five months pregnant and the law was relatively unclear. This was back in 1982. It still is relatively unclear as to what a judge in my stead should do under those circumstances. But I looked at what I thought the law would be and that would be to ignore the rights of the unborn child and simply look to the best interest of this 13 year old girl who was pregnant, wanting the abortion.

I just stayed up all night the night before the opinion, trying to figure out what I was going to do and how I was going to say it. But the bottom line is that after taking the testimony, I ruled that even ignoring the best interest of the baby, it still would be better for her not to have the abortion.

But I went on to editorialize, which judges can get in trouble doing, but I wanted to do it anyhow, just to say that even if the evidence had gone the other way, that is that it would somehow serve the emotional best interest of this 13 year old to get the abortion, I would not grant it because I considered that an unjust act for me to do. It ended up making headlines around the country and I got letters from all over the country on that.

Dr. James Dobson: Most of them angry?

Randy Hekman: No, no, actually eight to one were positive, it turned out.

Dr. James Dobson: Is that right?

Randy Hekman: Believe it or not.

Marcia Hekman: You would say, well I'm here to protect children, not kill them.

Randy Hekman: That's right.

Marcia Hekman: It's my job.

Randy Hekman: I mean, I'm a juvenile judge to protect kids from abuse and here I'm going to order the killing, merciless killing of an unborn baby. That's preposterous. I'm not that schizophrenic.

Dr. James Dobson: Randy, describe in just a moment or two, some of your other experiences on the bench. You're leaving it now. What has that been like? Give us a feel for what you've learned, what you've seen.

Randy Hekman: Oh, it's been a fascinating 15 years. We see just families from all over the landscape. We see certainly a lot of delinquent kids involved in drug abuse, breaking and enterings and some homicides and other sorts of things. Armed robberies.

Dr. James Dobson: Is it changing over time?

Randy Hekman: The last year, we've really seen a significant increase in the crack cocaine problem. We have 12 year olds selling crack cocaine on our street corners. We have the mothers who are addicted to crack. We see those cases increasingly where they will sell, literally sell their children to get their next hit of crack cocaine. It's incredible.

We've been involved in lots of sexual abuse type cases. In fact, I've been involved to help set up programs in our community to better respond to incest cases. And we have an excellent program that helps kids in the long run and families in the long run.

We've got a program for adolescent sexual offenders, which is a growing problem that I've helped to put together. I've enjoyed the cases. It's been a fascinating time for me to just see people, to interact with these hurting people. To learn for myself, where do these people go wrong? What can we learn from their experience to help me, even in my own life and family, and how can I be of help to these people? How can I help get them back on track? And some you're able to do that, but what I've really enjoyed too, is the helping to set up some of these programs to better respond to problems. That's been an exciting part too.

Dr. James Dobson: Marcia, women tend to be a little more security and stability oriented than men, especially those that have 10 kids. They tend to think about the future and about their financial wellbeing, and don't like change a lot. How do you feel about Randy leaving this prestigious judgeship to take over a new coalition like this and having to forge a whole new responsibility?

Marcia Hekman: Well, it does take some courage because it is kind of unknown, what we're getting into. And frankly, when he first mentioned it, what the pay would be. I thought-

Dr. James Dobson: Can we make it?

Marcia Hekman: Are you kidding? I didn't even want to talk about it really because here he's a judge, and he hasn't been humbling about his job. I've been praying over the years for him because I've always thought maybe God has something else and I used to pray about that. That God would fill him with wisdom and knowledge that he could know all the will of God in the first part of Colossians.

And I just wanted to pray that for him every day almost I would think that just because I want God's best and I'd say, how do you feel? He'd go on a trip or something, "did God speak to you at all or anything?" Cause I just wanted to...

Randy Hekman: There's a lot of talking.

Marcia Hekman: And he'd say no, nothing particular. And he'd say, in fact lately he's been giving up all his rights. He's been saying, I just want to go God's way. If he wants me to be a judge the rest of my life, I'll do that. And I thought, oh great. Well, that's okay. Then he is like willing, whatever you want God, and...

Dr. James Dobson: And you feel he is definitely leading in this?

Marcia Hekman: But then still, I thought this wouldn't be it. He wanted to become... This is a step down and oh, this can't be it. I didn't even want to talk about it. He didn't even want to talk about it. Why would it make sense?

But then this person who's in charge of getting the director for Michigan, felt it on his heart so much that they didn't want to just get anybody. They wanted somebody that was overqualified almost for this job. They wanted God to do some work in Michigan. There's people in Michigan that love people and care about our state.

And they wanted God's choice for a person, so this guy persistently called him back and said, I just feel you're the one for the job. So that grabbed Randy's heart. He said, maybe we ought to pray about this. He told me and I thought, oh really? But then I thought and then we went through all this prayer. And I just didn't have a peace about it.

I mean, what we're even saying about children is kind of unusual, pro child. It's not our message. We feel like God's writing it on our heart. And we thought, we'll have to tell them how we feel about children. Not just abortion and pro-life, but how we feel about kids. We want to be honest. We told this person, Kevin, who's was in charge of getting the person for Michigan about it, and he just said, "That's great. We want somebody who loves children, who wants God's will and wants God's will in Michigan and in our country."

Marcia Hekman: So, then we still didn't know. We want to talk to Dr. Dobson too because you're an authority on this whole... you thought it up.

Dr. James Dobson: Really?

Marcia Hekman: The coalition.

Randy Hekman: You're responsible, I think that's what she's trying to say.

Marcia Hekman: We want him to know how we feel too about this, and we shared with you at breakfast that morning, how we feel about kids and you just listened. And you said, I just want you to tell the country about how you feel about kids. Would you come on our show and tell them?

Something in me kind of clicked in that, when you said that and I thought, I didn't know what I wanted to say, but I thought I want to be on his team. If he's gutsy enough to share this message with our country, I want to be on that team. And I'll be on that team because I know that God's going to take care of me. I don't even care if we were to leave our 12 bedroom house, He'll take care of us because He's God.

Dr. James Dobson: I say it again to those who are listening, how comfortable are you out there as you watch obscenity and profanity and evil all around you? And as you watch our schools begin to be infected by secular humanism and you see school-based health clinics coming in, so the kids can be taught that safe sex is really the answer to the problem of disease. And abortion is a solution, if that doesn't work.

As you see these things happen, what are you going to do about it? I want to speak to the lawyers who are out there. Randy, you're an attorney. You could be making a lot of money. It's not terribly difficult for a lawyer to make $150,000 or $200,000 today. Certainly if he lives in a city and he's aggressive and intelligent, he can make a lot of money. You could make a lot of money.

They're an awful lot of attorneys listening to us right now. I hear from them, I know they're there, who do not give pro bono time to the pro-life movement and the pro-family movement. I'm not throwing stones at anybody, but the ACLU has incredible quantities of pro bono time, free time given to their cause. Do they really care more about their agenda than we do ours?

It's not until we begin to develop the attitude that you all are demonstrating and leading us in, you're doing a better job of it than I am, that we're going to save this country and the Western world. Canada's in the same mess that we are. And that's why I wanted you to come here and share your story, not only about kids and about material things, and about your love for the Lord, but this great zeal to do what he wants you to do.

Randy Hekman: Well, I really have hope for our nation. I think God has put it on my wife's heart and my heart to get involved in this. I don't consider this a sacrifice. I consider this a privilege. I look at my 10 children and I say, "What am I going to be giving to them into their future and to their peers that we're going to be giving to?" And I'm thinking that God has not giving up in our culture yet. He's put it on our hearts to become involved in this. I know he's raising up other people to get involved and it's got to start with us.

I've got to look in the mirror and say, am I the husband I should be? Am I the father I should be? If not, God help me to be the husband and father I should be. Help me to get my life and my family going God's way, never perfectly, but going God's way. Help me to encourage the people I go to church with to do the same thing. Help the people in our community to do the same thing. There'll be a fight, yes, but it'll be built on a foundation of God's strength and righteousness. We will change this country, not by just putting a shell, a legal shell over the top, but working from the guts, from the inside.

Marcia Hekman: That's right.

Randy Hekman: It's going to change by God's grace. He cares about us and we're going to see change.

Marcia Hekman: That's right.

Dr. James Dobson: That is not only the hope of the future, it is the only hope.

Roger Marsh: Wow. What passionate words from Randy Hekman, his wife Marcia, and Dr. Dobson on today's edition of Family Talk. You've just heard the second half of Dr. Dobson's classic discussion with the Hekmans, and if for some reason you missed part one, remember you can go listen to it right now at drjamesdobson.org.

And while you're there, you can also learn more about what Randy, Marcia and their family are up to these days, as well as Randy and Marcia's recent book called Sweeter by the Dozen. We're available around the clock to answer any questions you might have about the JDFI or Family Talk. We are also happy to pray with and for you.

I'm Roger Marsh and from all of us here at the Dr. James Dobson Family Institute, thank you so much for listening today. Please join us again next time, right here for another addition of Dr. James Dobson's Family Talk.

Announcer: This has been a presentation of the Dr. James Dobson Family Institute.

Roger Marsh: Roger Marsh here with an important update for you. Last August on this radio program, Dr. Dobson interviewed Scott Baller of Saturate USA. Saturate USA is an evangelical organization, committed to sharing the gospel with all 120 million households here in the US. The strategy to execute this ambitious goal is to empower local churches to share the good news of Christ within their communities, with easy to understand door tags and gift bags.

As we learned last summer, in Dr. Dobson's conversation with Scott, the materials for this campaign are free, and here's the exciting part. Just by having Scott on Family Talk one time to explain how Saturate USA works and how people can engage and accept Jesus Christ is Lord and Savior, over 102,000 people made a decision to accept Christ. That is good news indeed. But we cannot stop there. Over 44 million homes have already been adopted by churches to receive the Saturation packets. If we pull together as Christians, we can and will reach all 120 million in the USA. And that's where you come in. Your church or small group can adopt a neighborhood in your city, and Saturate USA will send you everything you need to share Christ with your neighbors.

You'll receive a welcome letter and specific literature, videos and the gospel explaining who Jesus Christ is, why He loves you and how the sacrifice of His death on the cross is the ultimate promise fulfilled. There is so much division and conflict in our nation right now, the only real sustainable antidote to this divide is the love of Jesus Christ. Jesus already paid the ultimate price and defeated sin on the cross. Now, God is asking us to share that message with the world. Saturate USA has already touched one third of the homes in America, but they're just getting started. To learn more about how you can get involved and strengthen families in your community, visit saturateusa.org. That's saturateusa.org.
