Halliburton’s Philosophy on Political Engagement

Halliburton is a global company, and our operations take place in countries and jurisdictions that have varying regulatory requirements. We remain actively engaged with the regulators and agencies that create and enforce regulatory standards to protect these networks. While Halliburton does not use corporate dollars to make political contributions to political candidates or political parties, we do meet with public officials and policy makers on matters that are of importance to customers, suppliers, employees, local communities, and non-governmental organizations on issues of mutual concern. We are committed to doing so in compliance with all applicable laws and regulations.

We also participate in public policy discussions through our membership in trade and business associations. These organizations engage in legislative activity regarding matters that affect our entire industry.

The Company believes that employees should take an active interest in fostering principles of good government in the countries, states, and communities in which they live. Employees may spend their own time and funds as private citizens supporting political candidates, parties, or committees, or for political advocacy. Halliburton does not reimburse employees in any way for their time, funds, or any political contributions.

Employees are prohibited from using the Company’s name, time, funds, or assets to personally support political candidates, parties, or committees, or for political advocacy.

The Company’s political activities and lobbying are consistent with our business objectives and public policy positions, and these activities are not predicated on the personal views of the Company’s management, employees, or board of directors.

Employee training on compliance with the Company’s policies on political activities and lobbying is covered as part of required Code of Business Conduct training every two years.

Board Oversight of Political Engagement

The Halliburton Board of Director’s Nominating and Corporate Governance Committee is responsible for the overall corporate strategy for political engagement. In providing oversight for political engagement, the Nominating and Corporate Governance Committee reviews and approves political expenditures, payments to trade associations, and lobbying activities of the Company. Our directors have a range of skills and backgrounds relevant to overseeing our corporate political engagement, including business leadership, energy industry expertise, and experience with a range of different regulatory backdrops. In overseeing Halliburton’s political engagement, the Board and its Committees are updated on trends in regional regulatory and political environments, including matters relating specifically to our industry, such as the dynamic geopolitical backdrop of the energy business, as well as sustainability concerns relating to the industry.

Corporate Political Contributions

Halliburton does not make contributions to political candidates or political parties. The Company’s corporate political participation complies with all applicable laws.

527 and 501(c)(4) Organizations

Halliburton does not use corporate funds to make contributions to 527 organizations or 501(c)(4) organizations. Halliburton has not used corporate funds to make any direct independent expenditures on behalf of candidates running for public office.

HALPAC Contributions

The Halliburton Company Political Action Committee (HALPAC) was established in the U.S. as a means for our employees, through their voluntary contributions, to support candidates whose views on matters affecting the industry represent the best interests of Halliburton and its employees. HALPAC is a multi-candidate, non-partisan political action committee and a candidate’s eligibility for support is evaluated by the HALPAC Board based on a variety of criteria. Criteria include the candidate’s record on business-related issues, the leadership and committee assignments for which the candidate might be eligible, and the extent of Halliburton facilities and employees within the candidate’s district and state. Halliburton meets with public officials and policymakers on matters that are important to our business, customers, employees, and other stakeholders.
